

Create a download folder for your project. You will keep digital copies of all the materials you use for your project.

Most of the databases and many of the more reliable Web sites have a download option. Use this option to download a digital copy of the information.

Be careful! Notice what the default download file name is. Often it will be the same name for every file, which will just overwrite the last file you saved! Be sure to rename each file something unique and descriptive.

If there is no download option you can either e-mail the information to yourself then save it to your project folder or print it as a pdf. Go to File > Print > PDF995. Save the pdf to your downloads folder and watch that file name!

Why is this a good idea? Research is a process with steps and skills that are built up. Having a digital copy of the original text of an article will save you the time of retyping direct quotations in your notes. Notes? Yes! You will be creating digital notecards through NoodleBib.
